VALERINA CHANGARATHIL

AN Uber-style courier service has launched in Adelaide as part of a national rollout after a successful run in Sydney.

People Post is promising Adelaide customers anytime deliveries with competitive pricing, convenience and transparency, Sydney-based co-founder Wayne Yue Wang said.

For runners/couriers, it's an opportunity to earn extra income. "We love the shared economy concept that's catching up with Australia. We wanted to change an inflexible, dated model and give it hi-tech improvements," he said.

Deliveries can be booked through the website or the People Post Sender app, with runners receiving the jobs on their People Post Runner app.

Senders pay People Post before delivery, which then takes a 15 per cent cut on the cost of delivery to customers and transfers the rest into the courier's account after it gets a confirmation of delivery.

Sending parcels can cost anywhere from $13 upwards for casual deliveries.

The national parcel delivery or courier business is estimated to be worth billions of dollars and is dominated by Australia Post, Toll and others.

But with rising customer dissatisfaction and growing expectations, Mr Wang is hoping the start-up he founded with Harry Han and Sam Wang can grow its niche market.

He claims to have 7000 runners across Australia.

South Australian People Post "runner" Mark Proctor said he was looking for part-time work while studying and operating a gym.

"It works for me because I can choose which jobs to pick to suit my time. It has worked well in the past few months that I have tried it."

Runners need to submit identity proofs, which are then verified against any social media accounts. They also have to pay a bond or deposit, ranging from $100-$1000, which is held in a trust until they choose to opt out.

"The deposit is to offer customers the security that their parcels will get to the intended destinations," Mr Wang said.

Deliveries are tracked using the runners' smartphones and they are reviewed and rated after every job — a better rating allows them to move from bidding for jobs to simply taking the ones they prefer.

While People Post does not screen parcels or senders, Mr Wang said the company verified location accuracy and collected IP addresses and other customer information.

So,

A) It's BSR's Home game, and
B) North's A Grade coach is manning the Under 14's Score board...

Good to see us winning
